Sundar Pichai is an Indian-American business executive who is currently the CEO of Alphabet Inc., the parent company of Google. He was born on June 10, 1972, in Chennai, India. Pichai studied at the Indian Institute of Technology Kharagpur, where he earned his Bachelor's degree in Metallurgical Engineering. He then pursued higher education in the United States, earning a Master's degree in Material Sciences and Engineering from Stanford University and an MBA from the Wharton School of the University of Pennsylvania.

Pichai joined Google in 2004 and played a key role in the development of various products, including the Google Chrome web browser and the Chrome OS operating system. He later became the CEO of Google in 2015, taking over from co-founder Larry Page when Google underwent corporate restructuring and became a subsidiary of Alphabet Inc.

Under Pichai's leadership, Google expanded its reach and influence in various areas, including artificial intelligence, cloud computing, and hardware devices. He has been recognized for his leadership and contributions to the tech industry, receiving accolades such as Time magazine's 100 Most Influential People and Bloomberg's 50 Most Influential people in the world.

Pichai's tenure as CEO has been marked by initiatives to promote diversity and inclusion within Google, as well as efforts to navigate challenges related to privacy, data security, and regulatory scrutiny. He continues to lead Alphabet Inc. and Google, overseeing their operations and guiding the company's strategic direction in an ever-evolving technological landscape.